The organisation City of Trees have shown the public a plan to plant three million trees in Greater Manchester over the next quarter of a century, a plan that aims to use the power of trees to refresh and redevelop the area. Of course planting more trees in built up urban areas has not only beauty effects but also other good consequences. As well as reducing stress, encouraging people to spend more time in shopping areas and improving air quality, a lot of trees can actually reduce flooding in urban areas.

Tony Hothersall, the director of City of Trees, explained that the scheme had three main aims. He said, "One is to plant three million trees, which means a tree for every man, woman and child in the next quarter of a century. Next, we focus on managing existing woodlands because there is no point in planting new woodlands if you can't manage what you've already got. Finally, we want to interest people a lot more in their natural environment; in planting trees; in managing areas; in understanding more about the benefits that trees and woodlands bring to our society. They can do great things in terms of air pollution reduction and can help to protect us from noise pollution. What is really important is that it is about the right tree in the right place." And the plan is off to a storming start. Since its launch in 2015, about a hundred thousand trees have been planted around Greater Manchester.

Adidas creates trainers made out of ocean waste in an effort to reduce plastic in waters around world

German sportswear brand Adidas is helping to clean up the earth's oceans by using the waste floating around the world to make shoes. The sportswear company has teamed up with Parley for the Oceans, an environmental group that raises awareness of pollution in the ocean, to produce pairs of trainers made from recycled ocean waste. Only 7,000 pairs of the UltraBOOST Uncaged Parley were made in 2016, but the company says it plans to make one million pairs of shoes using Parley Ocean Plastic in 2017. "Nobody can save the oceans alone. Each of us can play a role in the solution. We are extremely proud that Adidas is joining us in this mission to show that it is possible to turn ocean plastic into something cool," said Cyrill Gutsch, the founder of Parley for the Oceans.

Priced at €200, the shoes contain 11 plastic bottles. The upper part of the shoe is made from recycled polyester and waste plastic taken from the waters around the Maldives, and most of the rest of the trainer was made from recycled material.

Plastic in the world's oceans has become an increasing problem in recent years. A report in January said oceans would contain more plastic than fish by 2050 unless the world stopped rubbish leaking into the seas. According to UNESCO, in 2006, there were 30,000 pieces of floating plastic for every square kilometer of ocean. Plastic kills over a million seabirds and 100,000 marine animals every year.

Suggested writing:

If I were asked whether I would like to live in the city or in the countryside, my question would definitely be in the countryside. Living in the countryside brings me a lot of benefits. Firstly, in the countryside there is lots of fresh air, so I can enjoy a happy life without polluted air. Secondly, in the countryside there is not so much traffic as in the city. Therefore, I always feel peaceful, quiet and safe when living there. Last but not least, people in the countryside are very friendly. They always smile and greet when they meet their acquaintances.
