People like trees for a lot of reasons. They give us shade in summer, fruit to eat, different colours to look at and a place for children to play. They also give birds and insects a place to live.

Trees are also one of the most valuable parts of the environment since they give us oxygen – clean air. The world largest rainforests in Brazil, Africa and South East Asia supply about 80 percent of the oxygen for the world's fresh air.

Rainforests also give us thousands of valuable wild plants. One square kilometer of rainforest sometimes contains 250 different types of plants, including 125 different trees! These plants and trees are valuable as scientists use them to make a lot of medicines.

But every year an area of rainforest as big as England and Wales disappears. That's 151,000km². Large companies cut down the trees for valuable hardwood and for wood for making paper. There are also forest fires. For example, in 1998 an area of the Amazon rainforest as large as Belgium (30,500km²) disappeared. Everyday about 50 kinds of rainforest plants and animals become extinct. Whole systems of plant and animal life are disappearing forever.

Câu 36: According to the second paragraph, why are trees important to the environment?

- A. Because they are the world largest rainforests.
B. Because they are home to birds and insects.
C. Because they supply clean air.
D. Because they supply 80 percent of fresh air to Brazil, Africa and South East Asia.

Câu 37: According to the passage, which of the followings does NOT have rainforest?

- A. South East Asia B. England C. Africa D. Brazil

Câu 38: Which of the followings is NOT true?

- A. Lots of trees are cut down for wood.
B. Many kinds of medicines are made from trees and plants.
C. Every year England and Wales lose 151,000km² of rainforest.
D. Fires are also the cause of the disappearance of rainforests.
