All of us are dead

You might have noticed another show from South Korea sitting in the No. 1 most-viewed spot on Netflix. All of Us Are Dead is a coming-of-age story set in a high school. A high school (34) _____ by a zombie virus outbreak.

All of Us Are Dead is a clever and effective zombie survival story. Set in a high school in South Korea, it follows a group of students who become trapped after the outbreak of a zombie virus. These students use everything at (35) _____ to protect themselves and survive. Some of the characters include Nam On-jo, (36) _____ dad is a firefighter and taught her useful survival skills; Lee Cheong-san, On-jo's childhood friend who has a thing for her; and Choi Nam-ra, the class president.

The best part about All of Us Are Dead is that it's not only a thrilling zombie drama, (37) _____ it's also about the lives of high schoolers. Their drama is equal to, if not bigger than, the apocalypse taking place around them. It makes the show fresh, helps it stand out from the slew of (38) _____ zombie shows out there. The zombie virus outbreak could also be seen as a Covid metaphor (not in an off-putting way).

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 39 to 43.

There are major differences between family life and responsibilities in Vietnam and Western countries. There may be three generations, sometimes even four, living in the family home in Vietnam. That has not been the case in many other countries of the world for decades.

There is an unwritten structure to family life with most members working within the home and on the land in every village in the country. The exception is the elderly who are allowed to “retire” yet their opinions carry a great deal of power within the family. It is rare that other family members will go against the wishes of parents and grandparents. Children certainly regard their mothers as important as their fathers because of the care they get from their mothers. However, in Vietnamese society, the reality is a bit different. At Tet, when respect is shown to family and ancestors, it is the male side of the family that takes precedence on the first day; the female side of the family is on the second day. Each member of the family has a responsibility to all the others. That may come in the form of encouragement but it may also be material help if there is an obvious need or indeed there is a request.

It does not appear that all the family traditions in the Vietnamese culture are being eroded in any way, despite the move of people from the village to the city. Even today, the choice of a wife may involve the parents or extended family. It is changing as city life becomes more common but it is unlikely that anyone will go ahead without the approval of the family, especially parents, too often.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 44 to 50.

After several high-profile cases, the government has launched a campaign to bring the issue into the open. For victims such as Thao, schools are the crucial starting place for the campaign. She was 13 when her maths teacher began his two years of abuse. Due to the stigma and a damaging culture of secrecy, her abuser has never been named or taken to court. The abuse, first violent, became sexual when Thao was 14. Terrified, she eventually went to her mother but they chose not to report it. "We knew the police wouldn't solve it and my mum didn't want everyone to hurt me by judging me, saying mean things, spreading rumors," she said. Most of the high-profile child abuse cases in Vietnam this year have involved teachers, with an ethics teacher recently jailed for raping young girls and another teacher arrested for impregnating a student.

In Vietnam, some forms of sexual violence aren't even considered a criminal offense – sexual assault remains an administrative violation and the maximum fine is just $13. "In March, a man was fined just 200,000 VND ($10) for assaulting a woman in a Hanoi apartment elevator. The following month, an ex-government official was caught in a similar incident in Saigon, this time molesting a child. The incident caused nationwide uproar and residents of the apartment block started a petition calling for an amendment to the law, and while the people's supreme court responded, they are still debating whether or not "touches to the neck and belly" can be classified as sexual harassment."

Vietnamese police recorded 1,547 child abuse cases in 2018 but Rana Flowers, UNICEF Representative in Vietnam, said the figures were likely to be the "tip of the iceberg". She welcomed the government's initiative but said much more needed to be done. "The fast growth of the internet in Vietnam poses a new risk for children with cases of abuse and exploitation on the internet and social networks also increasing," she said.

The campaign for awareness is slowly seeping into society, with people beginning to speak out about child abuse, calling for more effective laws and enforcement, spreading awareness over social media, and even designing a game to teach children about how to protect themselves. Yet the focus remains mainly on how children can prevent themselves from assault, rather than on preventing the abuse, to begin with.
