We've seen a steady increase in psychological distress among adults around the world. And I see (32) _____ increase in distress as being rooted in part in the messages we received as children around how to express feelings and emotions.

Of course, it's easy to blame our parents for what they did or didn't do. (33) _____ the real issue is the lack of emotional literacy in our culture. We don't teach parents how to respond to children's feelings and emotions with (34) _____. We also don't teach it in our kindergartens; we don't teach it in our schools. We still value IQ far more than we value EQ.

I'm lucky enough to understand and study emotions, and I began to see that what we need as humans is a safe place to unpack all of (35) _____. We need boundaries and holding, but we also need compassion for those big feelings that rise within. Instead of trying to fix their problems and trying to (36) _____ them happy all the time, I just get down low and say: "Tell me all about it."

The "The girl in the red scarf" made famous after featuring on the cover of National Geographic in 1985 has become an iconic symbol of photography.

The photo portrays a young girl wearing a red headscarf. It focuses on her intense green eyes. "I knew she had an incredible look, a penetrating gaze which can make your heart fall. She seems able to read your mind." Steve McCurry, the photograph taker, said in an online interview. "It was not easy to take the picture because there was a crowd of people around us, the dust was swirling around and it was before digital cameras and you never knew what would happen with the film."

McCurry said he knew the picture was special when he developed it. "When I showed it to the editor of the National Geographic, he leaped to his feet and shouted, 'that's our next cover'," he added.

Just by looking at the photograph, you can feel the youth and greenness in the middle of a yellowish desert land where fruitfulness is sparse. The black-lit image highlights the girl's delicate features. "The structure of the photo is fantastic, as it depicts not only the young lady who seems to brighten the surrounding but also the perfect harmony between humankind and nature."

Read the following passage and blacken the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to the following questions.

Kakenya Ntaiya is the oldest of eight children in her family, belonging to Kenya's Maasai tribe. When Ntaiya was young, her father worked in a distant city, and the family was extremely poor. As the eldest, Ntaiya helped to feed and care for the younger children. She carried water, gathered firewood, cooked meals, and worked in the field. Like all the girls in her village, she was supposed to follow tradition and learn the skills to be a good Maasai wife.

Her father expected her to marry at age 13, as was the custom. However, Ntaiya didn't feel the same way. She had a plan. And she was brave enough to make it work. With all the courage she could find in herself, she went to her father and said she would do what he wanted if he let her finish high school. Her father agreed. Ntaiya graduated from high school with top honors.

After graduation, Ntaiya decided she wanted to attend college - a university in the United States. By then, however, her father was sick and in a hospital. All the family money went to his care, so there was no money for Ntaiya.

Ntaiya met the village leaders. At first, they were angry with her for daring to do what even few boys dreamed about. She promised she would use her education to help the village. She promised to come back and build a school. One village leader saw her determination and agreed to help her. He gave her money, and she also received a scholarship to Randolph-Macon Women's College in the United States. In 2004, Ntaiya received her bachelor's degree. Later, she got a job at the United Nations. In 2011, she received her doctorate in education — all made possible by her courage and her will to succeed.

Ntaiya did not forget her promise to the village. She returned to Enoosaen and in 2009, she opened the first primary school for girls in her village, the Kakenya Center for Excellence. There the students have education and opportunities that Ntaiya had to fight so hard for. Girls that were once forced to marry at 13 are now dreaming of becoming doctors, lawyers, pilots, and business women.
